The Old Story at the Circus.

The Augusta (Me.) Journal tells it again in this shape: "A young man from the country took his sweetheart to the circus in Hallowell, on Wednesday. After viewing with open mouth the wonders of the menagerie, and making many comments on the ferocity of the 'g'aveyard robbers,' and the huge elephants, the two proceeded to the main tent, and were observing the performance of the wonderful horse performer, when the nimble sons and daughters of the ring, presently, a sleek-haired, smooth-faced, innocent-looking young man, bearing a tray of lemonade, approached them, and inquired of the young man if he would not accept a glass of cooling drink for him and his young lady friend. The young man, supposing it was free lemonade, immediately took three glasses, one for himself, one for his lady love, and a third for another lady friend who was seated near by. When the glasses were emptied he returned them and thanked the young man for his kindness, when to his surprise he was informed that the price of three glasses of lemonade was 30 cents. He had come unprepared for any such drain upon his pocketbook, and after fumbling in his pocket for some time, he brought to light a small amount of nickels and handed them to the vendor of lemonade, saying: 'Here are 35 cents, while you are here, and you will have to wait for the four cents until your circus comes this way again.'"

Misers, such as figure in melodrama, are not often to be met with in real life. There are a few such misers as desperate villains who are never so happy as when they are killing and robbing their fellow-creatures. Nevertheless, many of the men and women who prey upon the world are passionate lovers of themselves and their belongings. We will say more than this. There are large numbers of persons whose love for their own possessions is such that they render themselves decided nuisances to their friends, and play sad havoc with much that is precious to human nature. They are never so miserable as when parting with a portion of their store, and never happier than when, by the adoption of some mean device, they are saving trifles. They are not necessarily poor. Indeed, it often happens that those whose means are most straitened are, by the miserly habit, those who are most proud, while, on the other hand, it is frequently the case that individuals who are well-to-do are adepts at practicing these small economies which are so detestable to all who contemplate them. We say small economies, because it is largely in petty matters that the miser's love for his hoard is manifested. We hope that our people can easily prove this from their own experience. Those who can not must have had very little experience indeed.

A MISSOURI FARMER'S VALUABLE INVENTION.—Mr. Eli Wayland, a resident of Salisbury, Mo., exhibited in town on Tuesday last the model of an invention of his that he has just patented, and which is undoubtedly destined to work a revolution in the labor of farming. It is a device by which ten different implements may be combined in one machine. It is a seed-sower, corn-planter, suiky plow, hay-rake, roller, two one-horse plows, hoe, meadow-splitter, corn-marker. We are sure that there is something in this invention, as Mr. Wayland is one of the solid men of the county, and is now using one of his machines constantly. We hope that most people will take an interest in this invention and forward the interest of this labor-saving machine. We speak for this a large patronage by our sensible farmers.—[Ex.]

INCONSTANCY CAUSES A SUICIDE.—A romantic suicide occurred at Fayetteville, Mo., last week. Daniel Wheeler, a young man, who had been married some time, but a few days before the appointed time the faithless fair one, who had been induced by her family to break the engagement, returned Wheeler's letters, rings, &c., and told him to consider all marriage arrangements at an end. The wretched lover, under the influence of a bad temper, went directly home, took a double-barreled shotgun, retired to the woods and discharged the contents of both barrels into his heart. Miss Adams is overwhelmed with grief.

SPORTING NEWS.

Base-ball.

Over two thousand people attended the game yesterday between the Red and the Hartford nines. The game can not be called a first-class one, although there was some excellent playing on both sides. The pitching of Larkin seemed to puzzle the Reds, and in consequence their batting was not up to the average. Jones, Foley and Ryan all struck out, the latter twice. Errors in fielding on the part of the Reds were noticeable. Pike did not seem to be on his mettle, as usual. His batting was indifferent, besides miffing an easy fly. Hastings' only bad play was a wild throw. Manning made a three-base hit, and was loudly cheered. Gould did good work at first base, and without an error.

To-day the same clubs play together again, and the interest which has been manifested in the game ever since the reorganization of the Reds will insure a good attendance.

Following is the complete score:
